

whiteboard and dry-erase markers. Yet, I found a classroom with their names and ballot numbers on the board. Videos show a student stating that the Elevate candidates forced him to vote for their entire slate. The footage reveals non-candidates—who had been campaigning for the group over the two-week period—standing over a student as he voted, using hand gestures like scrolling to direct him to their names on the election page. These non-candidates had been at the Elevate table, actively campaigning for them during the first two weeks. With all that said, I’m not intentionally trying to find ways to send in a complaint; the evidence came to me first, and all I wanted was an equal campaigning experience.
